Help People Impacted by Lung Cancer
GET INVOLVED
Wendy Williams and Cecily Hatchitt met through GO2 Foundation for Lung Cancer’s Phone Buddy Program. Then they became something more: friends.

“I was scared...because I didn’t want to get sucked into something that I didn’t know,” says Williams. “…Then I finally said, I have to talk to someone. I’m going to try it.”
Patients often hear the words clinical trial and don’t know what to expect or sometimes even what a clinical trial is. GO2 Foundation has put together a list of frequently asked questions surrounding clinical trials for you to have a better understanding of how clinical trials relate to your treatment journey.
Curt Groebner is passionate about golf—and fighting cancer. So passionate that he convinced 3 friends to play golf with him, once a year, for 24 hours straight. For 10 years. In the process he raised over $68,000, much of it for GO2 Foundation for Lung Cancer. “In our fourth year, my uncle was diagnosed with lung cancer,” explained Groebner. “In light of that and the fact that I had lost two grandparents to lung cancer, it made me realize that was something I wanted to fight for.”
The annual meeting held by the American Society of Clinical Oncology is the stage for presenting many of the most impactful advancements in cancer research – including in lung cancer. Health equity was the major theme of the 2021 meeting, and multiple studies showed that there are many disparities in lung cancer care that need to be addressed by our community.
